

Seed swaps are meant to help gardeners share their bounty with their friends and community, and we want to continue the tradition here at Julia Adams Morse Memorial Library beyond our seed catalogue.

The idea of a seed swap is to keep the seeds of your tastiest and most productive fruits and vegetables, and your most beautiful flowers, to plant the following year. Then you trade some of them for your neighbor's best, most beautiful, and tastiest crop seeds that they saved. In this way, everyone shares in the wealth of knowledge and dedication that we all have for our gardens. Everyone benefits from everyone's generosity. Let's continue our seed swap here in Greene!

We are hoping to expand on this idea to include not just seeds, but cuttings (rooted or unrooted), bulbs (whole or divided), transplants, seedlings, and more. More? What do we mean by more? We mean come with your garden stories or that cool garden tool, your garden journal, sketches of plants and/or your epic hilarious failures (and successes). Show us pictures of that clever thing you did that really worked.

We will have coffee and tea for you to enjoy while you swap seeds, stories, ideas, and more. Who knows? While you're here, you may just make some new friends. See you soon!
